

Graduate Student Handbook

Doctoral study in Philosophy at Emory entails a structured curriculum of coursework, departmental examinations (logic, languages, comprehensive portfolio papers), and training in professionalization and teaching.

The following handbook applies to students matriculating in Fall 2014 and after.
Updated: November 2022

I. Curricular Structure

A. Course Requirements

Students are required to take full time course work for three years, totaling no less than 85 credit hours (54 in seminars, 4 in program courses PHIL 700 and 777, and 27 by summer enrollment in PHIL 599 and 799), observing the following curricular requirements:

PHIL 700: Professionalization Seminar. This 2-credit course is required of all Philosophy PhD students in their first semester of study at Emory University. This course is taken in addition to three philosophy seminars. See III. Teaching and Professionalization Training, below.

PHIL 777: Pedagogy Seminar. This 2-credit course is required of all Philosophy PhD students in their third semester of study at Emory University. It focuses on the theory and practice of effective teaching, specifically within the discipline of Philosophy. This course is taken in addition to three seminars. See III. Teaching and Professionalization Training, below.

PHIL 797r: Area of Specialization Directed Study. In the fall of their third year, students pursue a semester long directed reading designed to round out their breadth in their AOS, which may be a topical or historical area. This directed reading must culminate in a written project such as a literature review or term paper to be evaluated by a committee of three faculty members. Whatever kind of project is pursued, it must be accompanied by an annotated bibliography.

PHIL 797r: Dissertation Prospectus Directed Study. In the spring of their third year, students pursue a semester long directed reading on their particular dissertation topic. The reading will be led by the dissertation director in consultation with the dissertation committee (see under IV. The Doctor of Philosophy, PhD, below). This directed reading culminates in a prospectus to be defended by the end of term. A successful prospectus defense is a condition for passing the directed study.

Course Distribution Requirement in History and Traditions.

Students must complete 5 graduate courses in history and traditions. The courses include one from each of these four areas:

Ancient Mediterranean
Modern (early modern or Kant)
19th Century
20th Century

Plus one additional course in any of the above areas.

Students choose from graduate courses offered at Emory during their regular course work. Acceptable courses can focus on one or more figures, movements, or topics in an area of history, or surveys. This requirement is to be met by the end of the student's third year.

If a student enters with an MA, they would be able to waive distribution requirements with relevant coursework done elsewhere. We do not presume that the MA in question is in Philosophy. Some master's degrees completed outside of a Philosophy program or department might include coursework that would satisfy our requirements.

The process for a waiver would be based on and thus extend current decision-making processes: In general, the Director of Graduate Studies determines whether an MA from an entering graduate student counts towards Emory doctoral degree. If there is any uncertainty, then the DGS consults with the Graduate Studies Committee. The exact same process extends to granting waivers for graduate seminars meeting distribution requirements that students took at other universities regardless of whether they were in philosophy programs. The DGS would decide in cases that are clear but take the decision to the GSC when more discussion is needed. Clear cases would be those completed with a grade of A or A minus and that parallel the academic level of courses taught in our own program. Students can petition the DGS about courses offered outside of Philosophy at Emory or at another university.

Examples of some of the many seminars that would fulfill each of the distribution requirements include: Ancient: seminars on Plato or Aristotle; Modern: seminars on Descartes or Kant; 19th Century: seminars on Marx or Hegel. 20th Century: seminars on Arendt or Du Bois. Topic courses based on multiple figures or movements in the relevant time-periods count toward the requirement. Seminars may include texts outside the timeframe if the course is centered on the period in question.

Should a student not be able to find a course at Emory to satisfy a distribution requirement during the time they are in coursework, the requirement can be waived.

B. Curriculum Policy

Students Admitted with an MA. Students who have received the MA degree or its equivalent from an accredited institution are held to the same timetable of requirements as incoming students without the MA, but take no additional courses in their third year beyond the two directed studies outlined above (AOS and dissertation prospectus). This reduces their course load by four courses.

Course Credit and Load. Graduate philosophy courses are 3 credit hours, excepting PHIL 700 and 777, which are 2 credit hours each. The normal full-time course load for students is 9 hours per semester (3 courses). Course numbers followed by the letter "r" indicate that the course may be repeated for credit when the subject matter changes.

First Semester. During the first semester of graduate study, regardless of standing, all students take PHIL 700 and three graduate courses in Philosophy. After successful completion of the first semester students may, with the approval of the Director of Graduate Studies, register for courses offered by other departments and programs.

Cross-listed Courses. All courses cross-listed with Philosophy count toward the credit hour requirement of the degree.

Courses in Other Departments. Courses hosted by other departments and not cross-listed with philosophy do not normally count toward the credit hour requirement for the degree. Students may petition the Director of Graduate Studies for such a course to count toward their degree, however, by providing an account of its relevance to their philosophical education.

A number of Emory graduate programs offer Graduate Certificates via an organized sequence of courses, for a complete list see here. (Filter by Certificate.)

Directed Studies. Directed study opportunities (beyond the AOS and Prospectus directed studies) are available to students after their second semester. A student may register for no more than two such additional directed studies (regardless of department) during his/her time at Emory. Students considering enrollment in a directed study should consult with their faculty advisor and with the Director of Graduate Studies during the prior semester. Enrollment is dependent upon approval by the professor in question. No more than two students may take such additional directed studies with a professor at any one time.

PHIL 599r/799r. These courses fulfill different roles in the program and students are automatically enrolled in them by the department's Academic Department Administrator. PHIL 599r: Thesis Research is for students not yet in candidacy and PHIL 799r: Advanced Research for those in candidacy. PHIL 599 is used for enrolling students pursuing a Master's thesis or for students beyond their third year who are not yet in candidacy. PHIL 799 is used for enrolling students in candidacy for dissertation research. These courses are also used to continue full time enrollment over the summer.

PHIL 599 and 799 are graded Satisfactory/Unsatisfactory and require evidence of accomplishment for the S grade to be awarded. PHIL 599 and 799 are graded by the student's pre-dissertation advisor or MA thesis advisor (PHIL 599) or by the student's dissertation director (PHIL 799). At the start of each term (semester or summer) of enrollment in 599 or 799, students provide their advisors/directors with a one paragraph proposal of their planned activities for the term; at the term's close, they provide a one paragraph report detailing their progress on what they proposed. The advisor/director informs the Director of Graduate Studies of the student's grade for the term in question and the DGS submits the grades. Students must provide such evidence to their advisor/director of good progress in their research over the course of the term to receive a Satisfactory grade; it is not automatically awarded. Students failing to provide such evidence will be graded as Unsatisfactory and thereby placed on LGS probation (see "Probation" under V. General Policy and Procedure, below).

Department Colloquia. The department sponsors a colloquium series extending throughout the academic year. Speakers include both members of the Emory faculty and invited guests from other universities. All students are fully expected to attend the colloquium as part of their normal graduate education.

Incompletes. A grade of "Incomplete" can be given in a course only under the most extraordinary circumstances, such as serious illness, and then only after the faculty member has consulted with the Director of Graduate Studies. Permission granted, the requisite course work must then be completed before the end of the following semester.

C. Discursive Norms for Graduate Seminars

The Philosophy Department is committed to rich and inclusive graduate seminars. It thus expects all participants to engage the material and one another in thoughtful, respectful, and generous ways. Participants should share their thoughts and leave room for, as well as respond to, others.

Participants bring distinct dispositions, interests and background knowledges to class, and speak from positions of diverse social standing. A strong seminar not only tolerates but also embraces such differences and the insights and issues they generate, which can include disagreement. When disagreements arise, participants should be respectful and thoughtful regardless of whether one receives or delivers an objection.

Just as there are multiple viewpoints and learning styles in a given classroom, so too there are various pedagogies and a wide range of valuable learning outcomes. The above norms are thus intended to function in accord with specific seminar requirements and objectives, subject matter, and enrollment size.

Graduate seminars can prove transformative when participants are open to learning new things and to changing their minds. To reach that goal, participants should respond thoughtfully and creatively to texts, remain open and responsive to one another, and continually co-create a community of inquirers that strives to foster the well-being and growth of all of its members.

If problems arise regarding seminar conduct, steps will be taken to address counter-productive behaviors. Concerned students should communicate directly with the instructor and should the situation persist, with the DGS or Chair, who will respond in accord with the LGS Conduct Code.

II. Departmental Examinations and Requirements

A. Language/Logic Requirement

--Effective 22-23; current students should email DGS to opt-in to this version of Departmental Requirements---

All graduate students must fulfill the Language/Logic requirement. This can be accomplished in one of two ways, depending on the research program of each student. Students may either take:

1. Two Language Option: pass two translation exams in two languages relevant to their research training, or
2. Language/Logic Option: pass one translation exam in one language and pass the Logic Exam.

Language and Logic Exams are administered during the second week of each semester (Fall and Spring). The Director of Graduate Studies will coordinate with the Program Administrator on preparation and grading of the exams. PA has a sample of past Language and Logic Exams on file, which students can consult.

Students are required to demonstrate competence in basic logic by taking a department-administered exam. The logic exam covers the following topics: 1) basic logical concepts and the analysis of arguments; 2) basic informal logic and fallacies (including language and definition); 3) basics of deductive reasoning, including propositions, syllogisms, truth tables (including indirect truth tables), propositional logic, and first-order predicate logic; and 4) basics of inductive reasoning, including analogical, causal, and probabilistic explanations.

The exam follows the terminology and notation system used in Hurley and Watson, A Concise Introduction to Logic (Cengage). Copies can be found in the Vico and Woodruff Libraries. The logic exam is offered twice a year, on the first Friday of each semester, 10:00 am–1:00 pm. A score of 70 is required to pass the exam. A sample exam is on file in the department office.

The language requirement can be fulfilled by passing an examination for reading competence. On the exam, students translate a passage of philosophical prose (approximately 400 words) in a two-hour period. Dictionaries, including online dictionaries are permitted, except in the case of ancient languages, where only print dictionaries may be used. Language exams are offered on the second Friday of the semester from 10:00am–12:00 pm. Students should complete the two language exams by the end of their sixth semester in the program.

The language departments at Emory frequently offer intensive courses for reading knowledge. Interested students are advised to make contact with the respective departments for scheduling. In rare circumstances, the graduate school may hire an instructor to teach an intensive language summer course (in Ancient Greek, for example) given adequate enrollment. The Philosophy department typically runs multiple non-credit reading groups in languages other than English. Past language exams are on file in the department office.

International students who have learned English as a second language (that is, non-native and multilingual English speakers) may petition the Director of Graduate Studies (who will consult with the Graduate Studies Committee) to have English serve as one of the two languages or the one language in addition to logic used to meet the language/logic requirement. For instance, a native Spanish speaker who has learned English as a second language and is clearly fluent in English could request that English be counted as one of their languages for the language/logic requirement; but that student would still be required to pass another non-Spanish language exam or the logic exam in order to fulfill the language/logic requirement completely.

Students should complete these requirements by the end of their sixth semester in the program.

B. Grant Writing Requirement

During their third year in the program, students are required to write a grant proposal for external (non-Emory) funding for their fourth year. Students who receive major external funding will be guaranteed a sixth year of funding at Emory. Students do not actually have to apply for a grant (should deadlines not allow), they can satisfy the requirement by submitting a completed proposal to the DGS.

The graduate school runs a program of workshops devoted to grant writing targeted at graduate students. The department encourages its students to participate in such programs in the quest for external funding for their research. Details can be found here.

III. Teaching and Professionalization Training

Emory philosophy students are provided with professionalization training commensurate with the current demands of the discipline, including teaching duties. Successful completion of such training and teaching duties is a condition for the awarding of all advanced degrees. Special arrangements may be made for students admitted with an MA degree and extensive teaching experience elsewhere.

A. Teacher Training

Students receive training and support in a graduated, closely supervised series of teaching responsibilities culminating in the creation of a course of their own design.

TATTO. All PhD students participate in the Teaching Assistant Training and Teaching Opportunity (TATTO) course sponsored by the Laney Graduate School. This consists in two days of pedagogy workshops and practice teaching taken by all students in mid-August prior to the beginning of their second year. This course appears on the student's fall transcript as TATT 600.

PHIL 777: Pedagogy Seminar. All PhD students take a 2-credit PHIL 777 pedagogy seminar in their third semester of study, dealing with issues specific to the theory and practice of teaching philosophy at the college and university level.

Teaching Assistantship. Students serve one semester as a Teaching Assistant in the fall semester of their second year. During the late spring to early summer of their first year, the DGS sends out a list of possible courses for TA assignment and asks the students to rank their preferences. Every effort is made to assign students their first preference. Students receiving lower preference courses for their TAship receive priority consideration in the assignment of teaching associateships in spring (see below).

Teaching Assistants typically attend classes, grade assignments, and hold regular office hours. The duties of a Teaching Assistant are determined by the faculty member responsible for the course. As TAs, students are automatically registered for TATT 605.

Co-Teaching (aka Teaching Associateship). Students serve one semester working with a faculty member as a Co-Teacher in the spring semester of their second year. In early September of their second year, the DGS sends out a list of possible courses for co-teaching and asks the students to rank their preferences. Every effort is made to assign students their first preference.

In addition to the duties of an Assistant described above, a Co-Teacher typically helps construct a course syllabus and course requirements, evaluates student work, lectures or leads class several times over the course of the semester, and helps write exams or other assignments. The duties of a Co-Teacher are determined by the faculty member responsible for the course. In all cases, the professor is obliged to observe and provide feedback on the student's teaching. Co-teachers should arrange a first meeting prior to the deadline for book orders (i.e., October for spring courses). As Co-Teachers, students are automatically registered for TATT 610.

Grading Protection. No TA or co-teacher shall be responsible for, undertake, or complete more of the grading or related assessment of required undergraduate student work that serves as a basis for the final course grade than the instructor of record.

Teaching One's Own Course. Students teach courses of their own design during three semesters, typically once in the fall or spring of their third year and then in both fall and spring of their fifth year. Student syllabi are subject to approval by the Teaching Coordinator of the Graduate Studies Committee. Syllabi are to be submitted to the Teaching Coordinator prior to the deadline for book orders (please note that these deadlines are extremely early: for fall courses, book orders are due in March, for spring courses, October).

While teaching their own course, students are to be observed teaching by their faculty advisor or by the Teaching Coordinator of the Graduate Studies Committee should their advisor be on leave.

B. Professionalization Training

The following aspects of our program have been designed to introduce and familiarize students with philosophy as a profession. Successful completion of these features is requisite for the awarding of any advanced degree.

PHIL 700: Professionalization Seminar. This seminar is required of all philosophy PhD students in their first year of study at Emory University. The course seeks to provide students with an opportunity to reflect on and develop professional skills geared toward success and advancement in the discipline. The course typically includes presentations by many Emory philosophy professors as coordinated by the course's instructor, and familiarization with the resources available for professional development via the Woodruff Library, the College of Arts and Sciences, the Graduate School, and related Centers and Institutes at Emory, as well as the American Philosophical Association.

Academic Professional Ethics Requirements (JPE). All graduate students at Emory University are required to undergo training in academic professional ethics. Satisfaction of this requirement entails completion of the three part "Jones Program in Ethics" (JPE). Completion of elements 1 and 2 are required for candidacy, and 3 is required for graduation.

1. JPE 600: A 6 hour core seminar in scholarly integrity, supported by the Laney Graduate School in collaboration with the Emory Center for Ethics. Participation in this seminar will be recorded on the student's transcript.

2. Program-Based Instruction: A minimum of 6 hours of program-based ethics material. The disposition of this discussion time is at the program's discretion. These discussions may take place within existing courses, such as methodology or professionalization courses. They may also take the form of faculty-led workshops or journal clubs. The intention of this part of the program is to promote student discussions with their own program faculty, and to integrate explicit attention to ethics into the regular course of graduate education.

3. JPE 610: Minimum of 4 workshops. These workshops will be sponsored by the LGS, the Emory Center for Ethics, and will include any other relevant occasional lectures or workshops. Students will register for these sessions individually, and participation will be recorded on the student's transcript.

Grant Writing Requirement: See II. Departmental Examinations and Requirements, D. Grant Writing Requirement above.

C. Professional Support

Professional Development Support (PDS) Funds. The graduate school provides students with funding for purposes of conference participation, research (including archive work), and training (including advanced language study), along with other similar professional development activities. A fixed amount is provided non-competitively to each Emory graduate student. Further PDS funding is available on a competitive basis. Amounts and details can be found here.

Note that all university funded travel must be booked in accordance with the guidelines found here.

Support Beyond the Fifth Year. Students preparing to enter their sixth year of graduate study are eligible to apply for Dean's Teaching Fellowships, which are awarded by the Graduate School on a competitive basis. A number of other fellowships and funding opportunities are available at the university library, the writing center, and other units on campus (through funds from Laney Graduate School and partners). For a complete list see here.

IV. The Doctor of Philosophy, PhD

A. Doctoral Candidacy: The Dissertation Prospectus

In addition to the successful completion of all course requirements, departmental examinations and requirements, and teaching responsibilities (items I-III above), the Doctor of Philosophy degree requires: A) entering doctoral candidacy by passing a written dissertation prospectus and an oral defense of it; and B) writing a doctoral dissertation and passing an oral defense of it. Students failing to satisfy these requirements may be eligible for a Master's degree (see C below).

In order to be admitted to doctoral candidacy, the student must have completed three years of coursework in residence (including PHIL 700, PHIL 777, and JPE 610), for a minimum of 85 credit hours at the 500 level or above, met all logic and foreign language requirements, passed the comprehensive portfolio requirement, successfully completed elements 1 and 2 of the Jones Program in Ethics, and submitted a dissertation prospectus acceptable to the faculty.

The student is expected to successfully defend his/her dissertation prospectus during the spring semester of their third year as part of their PHIL 797r Dissertation Prospectus directed study. Failure to do this will result in a grade of U for the course, thereby placing the student on LGS probation.

Students who have met all program requirements for an approved dissertation prospectus should file a dissertation committee form to obtain LGS approval for their committees.

Beginning with the class of 2017, students must reach candidacy by September 15 at the start of their fourth year (students who started before the fall of 2017 must meet the candidacy deadline in effect when they first enrolled, and must be in candidacy no later than August 1 before their fifth year). Students who do not meet this deadline will be placed on academic probation, will not be eligible for PDS funds, and may forfeit financial support. These sanctions are lifted when the student enters candidacy.

The Dissertation Prospectus. Students prepare a dissertation prospectus in their third year as part of their PHIL 797r Dissertation Prospectus directed study. The choice of the director of the prospectus is determined by the student with the approval of the faculty member concerned. In consultation with the student, the director proposes at least two additional faculty members as committee members to the Graduate Studies Committee for approval. A faculty member from another institution may serve as a prospectus committee member for special reasons, such as the subject matter of the proposed dissertation. This requires the approval of the graduate faculty of the department and the Graduate School. Note that LGS requires that the "Dissertation Committee" form, submitted at the time of the prospectus defense, include no fewer than three Emory faculty members, even in cases where a faculty member from another institution is serving as a prospectus committee member.

When the director and committee members are satisfied with the dissertation prospectus and the research it proposes, the student submits it to the graduate faculty of the department for formal approval. The prospectus is to be presented during the student's sixth semester, as part of the Dissertation Prospectus Directed Study (PHIL 797r). The prospectus includes a descriptive statement of the problem of the dissertation, an outline of the contents, a timeline for completion, and a bibliography of basic works to be used. The prospectus is normally approximately 10–12 double-spaced pages exclusive of bibliography. For guidelines, see this document.

The oral defense of the prospectus is chaired by the director of the prospectus committee. A copy of the prospectus is made available to all members of the department one week or more prior to the defense. All members of the department are invited to attend. The student presenting the prospectus and the members of the student's prospectus committee are required to be present. An accepted prospectus marks the formal beginning of the student's dissertation work. Upon acceptance of it, the student enters doctoral candidacy (i.e., is ABD, "all but dissertation"). Students who fail to do this may be eligible for a Master's degree. Sample successful prospectuses are on file in the department office.

B. The Dissertation: Research and Defense

The Dissertation Committee. This committee is composed of the same members of the graduate faculty who supervised the preparation and successful oral defense of the prospectus. The chair of the committee is the dissertation director (Co-Directors of two Emory faculty members are possible with GSC approval). This committee of three members works closely with the student in the preparation of the dissertation and guides it to completion.

After the successful defense of the dissertation prospectus, the dissertation director (in consultation with the student) proposes two additional people for the dissertation committee. At the director's and student's discretion, these additional people may serve as either "readers" (receiving the completed dissertation before the defense and preparing questions about it for the defense) or as "members" in full standing (working with the student in the development of the dissertation prior to the defense). No more than two people on the committee may serve as readers, though no one need do so.

Of the five people on the dissertation committee (whether members or readers): a) one must be from outside Emory Philosophy, either a faculty member at Emory in a program other than Philosophy or a faculty member at another institution regardless of program, and b) no fewer than three must be Emory Philosophy faculty members (not affiliated faculty). In cases where committee members leave for other institutions or retire, see LGS policy here.

PHIL 799r: Dissertation Research. Upon successfully defending the dissertation prospectus, students in candidacy are enrolled full time for 9 credit hours in PHIL 799r: Dissertation Research. Students in candidacy are automatically enrolled in this course for each semester, including summers, up to and including the semester of their dissertation defense. For further details, see above, "PHIL 599r/799r" in I. Curricular Structure.

Limits on Time to Degree. The expectation is that students will complete the dissertation and graduate in six years. As of Fall 2017, any student who has not completed the PhD by the end of his/her 7th year is subject to being dropped from the program. The student and his/her dissertation director may petition the Graduate Studies Committee for a one-year extension on the basis of evidence that the student is making appropriate progress toward the degree and that a completion date has been determined. The petition must include a timeline signed by the student and dissertation director and some explanation for why the student has not completed the degree. The GSC will forward the petition and their recommendation to the Dean of the graduate school who will approve or deny the request for this one- year extension. Only two such extensions may be considered (i.e., 9 year maximum time to completion).

This policy is effective starting fall semester 2017. Students who started before then remain covered by the policy in effect when they first enrolled (9 years in advanced standing before needing to petition for a one-year extension as per the above, with two such extensions possibly considered).

The Dissertation. Dissertations submitted to the department are expected to be 200–400 pages (60,000–120,000 words, inclusive of text, notes, and of bibliography), formatted according to Graduate School guidelines. In exceptional cases, these strictures may be waived by the Graduate Studies Committee, on recommendation of the dissertation director.

The Dissertation Defense. Approximately four weeks before the oral examination the dissertation is made available to faculty members and graduate students of the department. At this time a formal announcement of the examination date, time, place, and title of dissertation is given to all faculty and graduate students in the department and circulated to other appropriate departments and interested faculty. The examination has a public character within the university community and wider community of scholars. In particular, graduate students in philosophy are welcome to attend the examination. The examination itself is chaired and conducted by the director of the dissertation.

C. The Master of Arts

The Philosophy department does not offer a terminal Masters program for entering students. There are, however, two ways in which students admitted into the PhD program may earn an MA:

1) Students reaching candidacy en route to the PhD have satisfied the requirements for an MA. Conferral of the actual Master's degree (including transcript annotation), should the student desire it, is dependent upon formal application to the graduate school; see <http://www.gs.emory.edu/academics/policies/completion.html>. Master degrees are not awarded retroactively after completion of the PhD.

2) Under extraordinary circumstances, students admitted to the doctoral program may leave the program before completing the requirements for a PhD, either of their own volition or as a result of concerns regarding making good progress. Under these circumstances, students may elect to earn a terminal MA degree. To do so requires completing two years of course work (36 credit hours of seminars and 4 of PHIL 700 and 777), passing the logic exam, the language exams, the comprehensive portfolios, and then completing a Master's thesis.

The Graduate Studies Committee must review and approve all requests for consideration of a terminal MA degree prior to the submission of any request to LGS. See the LGS student handbook for further details, here.

The Master's thesis. The length of the Master's thesis is 80–120 pages (24,000–36,000 words, inclusive of text, notes, and of bibliography), formatted according to Graduate School guidelines. In exceptional cases, this limit may be waived by the Graduate Studies Committee, on recommendation of the thesis advisor.

The choice of the advisor of the Master's thesis is determined by the student with the approval of the faculty member concerned. In consultation with the student, the advisor proposes two additional faculty members as committee members to the Graduate Studies Committee for approval. The Master's committee is comprised of these three faculty members (there are no "readers"). There is no oral defense of a Master's thesis, the degree is awarded by majority vote of the committee.

V. General Policy and Procedure

A. Assessment of Progress

Student progress is monitored each semester by the Director of Graduate Studies and reviewed on an annual basis by the Philosophy faculty as a whole. At the end of each semester, the DGS places on probation any student failing to make satisfactory progress in the program requirements for his/her respective semester in the program (see "Probation" below).

Annual Letter. At the end of the spring semester, the DGS solicits comments on each student from all faculty members who have had formal contact with the student (as student in seminar and/or directed readings, advisee, TA, co-teacher, research assistant, etc.) and composes a composite letter on behalf of the faculty as a whole detailing student progress in satisfying the requirements of the program as outlined in this handbook. The DGS's letter is sent to the student in question after the end of each year and becomes part of his/her permanent file.

B. Probation

The following applies to students entering Fall 2018 and after (see below for policy applying to prior classes):

Students are automatically placed on probation when they:

- a) fail to reach candidacy before the beginning of their fourth year (by September 15),
- b) receive a GPA of less than 3.33 in any semester,
- c) receive an F, U, IF, or IU in any course (including PHIL 599 and 799), or
- d) receive two or more incompletes in a semester or an incomplete in one 9 credit hour course.

For students entering Fall 2017 the following point of policy is instead observed:

- b) receive a GPA of less than 2.70 in any semester

For students entering Fall 2016 and before, the following points of policy are instead observed:

- a) fail to reach candidacy before the beginning of their fifth year (by September 15)
- b) receive a GPA of less than 2.70 in any semester

Complete details on LGS policy are found here.

Students placed on probation consult with their faculty advisor and the Director of Graduate Studies to devise a plan for completing the outstanding requirements so as to return to good standing by the end of the following semester.

Students who are placed on probation for a second time, whether in consecutive semesters or not, may be encouraged to consider a terminal MA degree. Students who are placed on probation for three consecutive semesters, regardless of the reason, are subject to termination by LGS.

C. Grievance Policy

Students who have a grievance related to how the rules and procedures pertaining to their degree should report it to the Director of Graduate Studies. (If the grievance concerns the DGS, the student should report it to the Chair.) The student should describe the grievance and relevant details in a letter addressed to the DGS, who will try, if possible, to resolve the grievance in conversation with the student and relevant parties. If this is not successful, the DGS will appoint a committee of three Philosophy faculty members (or faculty members outside Philosophy if the situation warrants) or use an existing standing committee, who will review the grievance and propose an appropriate response. If it is impossible to resolve the grievance within this committee or within the framework of the Philosophy administrative structure, the DGS will forward the grievance to the Office of the Senior Associate Dean of the Laney Graduate School. From this point forward, the grievance will be handled according to the Grievance Procedure outlined in the Laney Graduate School Handbook.

Students who experience discrimination, harassment, and/or sexual misconduct are encouraged to report such matters immediately. Such reports can be made to the DGS, Chair, or any faculty member in the department. Students may also report directly to the Dean of Students in LGS, Jennifer Cason (ADMIN 209, jcason2@emory.edu; 404-727-2661), or to the Office of Equity and Inclusion, which is located in ADMIN 305 (<http://equityandinclusion.emory.edu/>). Because Emory is a mandatory reporting institution any report indicating a possible Title IX violation must be handed over to the university's Title IX officer in the Office of Equity and Inclusion. Apart from cases of sexual assault, the complainant will have input on the resolution of the case. For further details see the Laney Graduate School Handbook (under "Honor, Conduct and Grievance" and/or "Selected University Policies: Sexual Misconduct").

D. "Ten Hour" Rule

The Graduate School prohibits any student on financial aid from working in non-academic work in excess of ten hours per week over and above the normal departmental duties as a graduate assistant. The department fully endorses and supports this policy.

E. Parental Accomodation

The caregiver designated as having substantial parental responsibility may be relieved of graduate responsibilities for up to eight weeks after the birth or adoption of a child. Up to four of those weeks may be situated before the anticipated birth or adoption date. Full details can be found in the LGS handbook here.

F. Additional Points of Policy

For further policy details, please see the Laney Graduate School Handbook.
